

Described as a talented and perceptive songwriter Guy tells stories of people, places and situations in a thoughtful and melodic way. Many of his songs are essentially poems set to music though often with the addition of memorable choruses.

He has been writing and playing for many years and can be heard in folk clubs and other music venues around his home area of Hampshire and sometimes further afield. He has recorded four solo albums in the last 10 years and has recently released a double CD compilation of the first three, called Some Songs. He is also part of a collaboration with Richard Cox-Smith in the duo Mynott's Wing and with the addition of his old friend, Dick Fry, in the trio The Wandering Bilberries.

*Still searching for the perfect combination
Of words and notes joined seamlessly in one
When heart and soul combine within the stanza
And time itself is lost within the rhyme*
